DESIGN WEEKLY

BUSINESS OF HOME

Is there a better post-holiday pick-me-up than Paris? I've heard from so many designers who are attending Déco Off and Maison&Objet next week—and who, despite their excitement, aren't quite sure how to make the most of the trip. We've got you covered on that front: In this week's feature, BOH market editor Caroline Biggs has compiled the definitive list of can't-miss debuts at both shows, as well as the launch parties and cocktail hours to RSVP to before it's too late. Plus, if you've got a bit of time for inspiration around town, we tapped 21 industry insiders to tell us their favorite design-minded destinations in the City of Light.

We're kicking off the new year with some major headlines—starting with the Trump administration's decision to pause its plans for increased tariffs on upholstery and cabinetry, which were set to rise on January 1. We also covered the latest at Food52 and Schoolhouse, which filed for bankruptcy and announced a likely new owner. Finally, we broke the news this morning that Sandow acquired Architonic. Fred Nicolaus talks to founder Adam Sandow about how picking up the European design platform fits in with his global ambitions.

We're also stepping into 2026 with a great episode of The Business of Home Podcast. This week, Studio Four NYC founder Stacy Waggoner joins Dennis Scully on the show to talk about the rise of digital printing, and the surprising truth the tariff era has revealed about high-end fabric.

I've got a globe-trotting month ahead, with stops in Dallas for the ARTS Awards; Paris for our BOH Insider field trips ahead of Déco Off and Maison&Objet; then over to the U.K. for Design Destination London; followed by CNext in Mexico. Looking forward to seeing many of you along the way!
